POLICIES.

Lord St. Leonards, a great English judge, in his recent book called "Hand Book on Property Law," says:-"Very few policies against fire are so framed as to render the company legally liable. Generally the property is inaccurately described in reference to the conditions under which you insure --They are framed by the company, who, probably, are unwilling to bave a legal defence against any claim, as they intend to pay what they deem a just claim without taking advantage of any technical objection, and to make use of their defence only against what they may believe to be a fraud, although they may not be able to proveit. But do not rely on the moral feelings of directors. Acertain that your house falls strictly within
